

Alternative Dispute Resolution

Legal Services for Your ADR Needs

The decision to mediate or arbitrate is a strategic one, particularly in cases involving complex legal issues, technical and industry-specific standards, and emotionally charged participants. The increasing costs of litigation and trial practice, together with the uncertainty of outcomes and verdicts, have led parties to seek alternative means to resolve their disputes.

Parties involved in ADR find the practice to be more collaborative, and less adversarial, than traditional litigation and court proceedings. ADR results are often mutually acceptable for all involved parties.

Accomplished ADR Attorneys

Hiring the right ADR professional is key to winning, losing, or amicably resolving your dispute. Selecting a neutral with professional experience and industry-specific knowledge is crucial. As important, they should possess strong interpersonal skills including active listening, patience and tact, objectivity and fairness, receptiveness, and even temperament.

Whether it is a binding arbitration or a non-binding mediation, our professionals possess the qualities you need in a neutral. We have a reputation for being fair, honest, unbiased, and hard working. Our neutrals are impartial listeners who are adept at isolating and working out critical issues. They have industry-specific knowledge and a proven record of accomplishment in guiding parties to effective resolution.

Carter Conboy is home to many accomplished neutrals, including retired United States Magistrate Judge David R. Homer, and retired Appellate Division Justice Thomas E. Mercure. Throughout their careers, they have resolved thousands of cases in a wide-range of matters using mediation and arbitration.

Further, with respect to your transactional and litigated matters, Carter Conboy offers a comprehensive team of attorneys with significant experience in mediation and arbitration.

From individuals to family members to business owners and parties to a lawsuit, the ADR professionals at Carter Conboy can facilitate the resolution your dispute.
